This is how you get an office that does the job

Tips, ideas and inspiration for interior design solutions for functional offices. At home, at work and in between.

Everyone has the right to thrive at work

We have a large range and we are happy to guide you to your special solutions and combinations for the office. Because we want you and your colleagues to feel good at work.

We live in times of constant change. New ways of working place new demands on how we decorate our offices. There should be a quiet corner, but also a place for meetings. We are social by nature and being able to be meet and share knowledge and experiences, solve problems and create a team spirit, is a prerequisite for feeling good at work - and also benefits the company's development.

Therefore, we have developed several furniture systems that allow you to supplement and modify with new parts, and be sure that everything matches and maintains the same high quality.

Now that work from home has become a natural part of the work week, it is also important that ergonomics does not suffer. It should be as well equipped as your workplace. Sitting on the couch for a while and writing can work, but not a whole working day. The home office works best with the right conditions in the form of a desk, stand for your laptop, an adjustable chair and good storage.

What many do not know is that in addition to advice by phone or chat, we also help with assembly and removal of packaging. A turnkey office then. It could hardly be easier.

"We want to inspire, and then help you all the way to a turnkey office."

It's about being one step ahead

As we are constantly studying what real needs there are, and how they change, we were already able to present updated furniture for the home office last year. We now also offer products that make the company's offices an even better place to work, with an increased focus on multifunctionality and flexibility.

Early on, we saw increased demand for office furniture that was more durable, more ergonomic and practical, easier to adjust and that provided a better sound environment. We also knew that we needed a product range where the parts matched each other much better. You can see the result here: our own designed tables, seating furniture and storage that can be combined together to meet your needs both at work and in your home office.

Sustainability is already a priority and is becoming increasingly important. In the future, we expect to see you keep certain parts of a product, such as the frame from your desk, while the table top is replaced with a new one and the old one is recycled. It is a solution that places demands on both recyclable materials and smart production methods, and is an example of an idea that inspires us in our environmental work.

"We already have ideas for solutions to future needs."

06. We meet at the office

The office is the natural place to collaborate. But what types of meetings should it handle?

26

14. Closer to work in the home office

Working at home has become a natural part of the working week. What should you think about when furnishing?

14

20. Small offices where everything happens at the same time

The office must be flexible and take care of many tasks. With the right furniture you can make it work.

26. Decorate for wellbeing, with inspiration from home

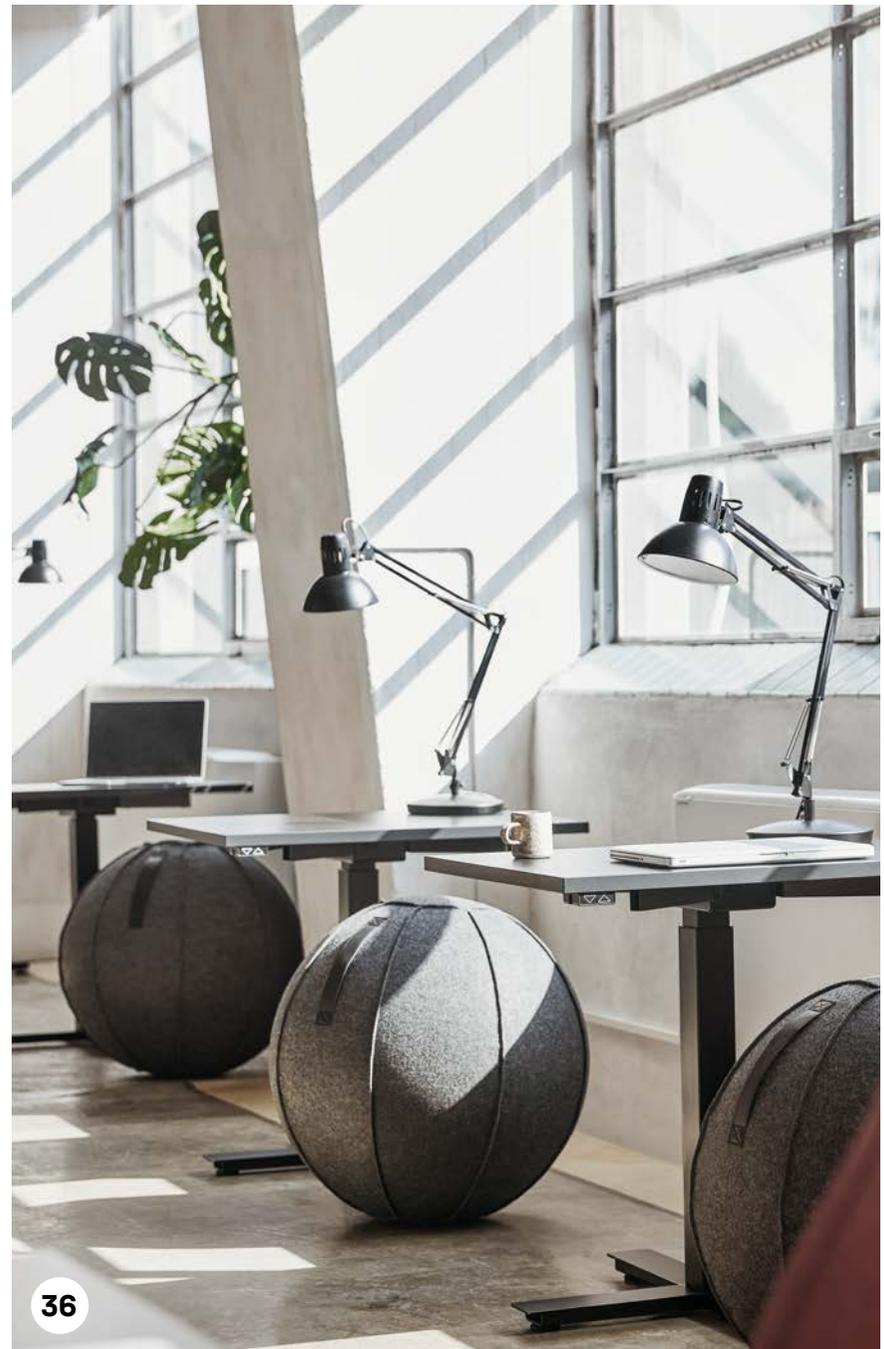

A more pleasant office makes you feel better, reduces stress and helps you get the job done.

36. A big office is like a small community

Planning a big office involves a lot of traffic. Which junctions need to provide space for spontaneous meetings?

Errors and omissions possible. Colour variations can occur due to printing techniques.

Welcome to collaboration!

While solo work can be performed in many ways, the most important aspect of working in an office is becoming ever clearer: to facilitate collaboration between people.

When we meet in the office, we also bring new experience and ideas. We inspire, and are inspired. Different thoughts are cross-pollinated and drive progress forwards. That happens in spontaneous meetings, quick catchups with the whole team, long, creative idea meetings, welcome meetings with customers and other visitors, informal meetings that enhance corporate culture, undisturbed private meetings and hybrid meetings with some delegates attending physically and others online.

All these different kinds of meetings need the right furniture and décor to work properly. That's where we come in. Our wide range makes it possible to create an environment that accommodates the ever-growing need for working together. A warm welcome to the updated office, the new place for collaboration.

← Work meetings: A varied range of seating, a height-adjustable table, a mobile glass board to write on, good lighting and storage able to accommodate all markers, paper and everything else you need. That's all that's needed for an active work meeting.

"It's quite obvious now that along with the growth of the online meeting, which works well for most people, the desire to see each other in the flesh has also highlighted the most important function of an office: to be a social arena. The energy that comes from a physical meeting is best generated in a well-planned office."

Camilla Gantelius - Interior decorator

A place where people can meet

Design your office to cope with different types of working and give the corporate meeting culture an overhaul. You'll make meetings more effective, rewarding and something everyone can look forward to.

Take a look at how all the spaces available in the office could work for different types of meeting. The lounge near the entrance, for example. Put a screen in there and make it a place for hybrid meetings with others not physically in the office. A sit-stand table in the big conference rooms also facilitates quick reviews and more informal 'mingle-meetings'. Standing up during a meeting has been shown to be more productive than long periods sitting down. Even the canteen can host a working lunch or quick catchups before and after lunch break. With the right décor, any area can do more.

↑ Spontaneous meeting: A trick to get meeting attendees to get to the point, state their opinion, make a decision quickly and get back to their desks in good time is to hold a spontaneous meeting standing up around a table. If it does drag on a bit, grab a couple of stackable chairs or stools.

→ Informal meeting: With the right mix of furniture, the same area can be used for informal meetings, coffee breaks and solo working in peace & quiet.

← Work meetings: Once in a while, everyone has to roll up their sleeves and concentrate on the same task. That's when a good meeting table and a really comfortable chair you can sit in for hours are worth having. A movable planning board also helps everyone to understand the issues and arrive at a collective answer. (Pssst...don't forget to stretch your legs!)

↓ Work meetings: The acoustics in a meeting room can make a difference to how long you can work effectively. A desk with a slightly softer linoleum surface cuts the noise of pens, coffee cups, etc. being put down.

Tips to create the best teamworking areas

Start by listing which teamworking areas you need, and where you want them placed around the office. Here are a few meetings your office may need space for:

Spontaneous meetings:

Take a look at the flow through the office premises. Where do most people pass most often during the day? That would be the perfect place for an inviting seating area, where it's possible to sit for a quick meeting. Sound-absorption in some form is a good idea to prevent disturbing others.

Online meetings:

Create multiple small spaces equipped for online hybrid meetings, with room for 2-4 people and a couple of others on jump seats. They'll be needed more than you think in future.

Big meetings:

A large room with plenty of table space and seating for up to 20 people is sometimes needed, but not always. You may want to consider furnishing a big meeting room with stackable chairs that can be moved away when not in use. Making the table height-adjustable provides better ergonomics and gives a varied working position for all types of get-togethers.

Informal meetings:

Good acoustics and a little more space are important here. For example: a mobile screen that can be moved around a table or a few armchairs signals that you don't want to be disturbed right now.

Work meetings:

Mobile planning boards are invaluable, letting you move the entire project idea wall to a teamworking area and park it where another group can bring in theirs too. Just try to avoid collisions!

Flexible meeting areas:

Sound-absorbent surfaces provide good acoustics while a screen makes it easy to show presentations or hold video conferences. The addition of a sofa or two gives more choice than just chairs. A room that avoids constraints, pure and simple.

↑ Flexible meeting areas: With work materials at arm's length, tables able to accommodate anyone who wants to stand up and others for those who want to sit, you're sure to have a productive meeting, regardless of the agenda.

Our Project Sales team are ready to help you with interior solutions for different meeting rooms. Call 01252 359760 ↑→ Online meetings: Arrange the furniture so that everyone can see all the delegates in the room. The positioning of chairs, lighting and the room's acoustics are key to ensure everyone feels they are seen and heard, and can see and hear everyone else properly. Fine-tune the electronics to avoid technical problems taking up precious meeting time, and create a good atmosphere right from the start.

A home office can harmonise with your living space

You may have discovered the advantages of working from home recently? Less travel, phone meetings can be taken outdoors, you can even do the washing and hug the kids when they get home from school. But with more working hours spent at home instead of at work, you may also have noticed that your home office needs the right equipment to function properly, while still avoiding making your home look like your work. We've got the answer. Regardless of whether your home office is a dedicated corner or a complete room on which you can close the door at the end of the day, you still need to think about lighting, ergonomics, colours and materials. It needs to feel good to go to in the mornings, even if it is only a step or two away from the breakfast table. It starts with a good chair to sit on, and continues with everything to make your home office into a functional, comfortable and healthy place to spend the day.

"An office space needs to convert quickly back into part of your home again when you shut down your PC. With the right décor, it's easier than you might think."

↑ Height-adjustable table for more movement. With the simple push of a button, you can quickly adjust the table height to work standing up or sitting down. The office chair's mesh back makes it ideal for work and meetings.

A dedicated room

Can you dedicate an entire room at home for work? Or are you lucky enough to have your own studio space? Congratulations!

Having a room that doesn't need to double up as part of your living space means you can do things properly. But we also have to bear in mind, of course, that a home office has less space to work with.

Start by sketching out a rough layout and populating it with the most important items of furniture, such as a desk and chairs. Place them where the furniture will be most accessible and will allow you to move easily around the room. Then think about how you can change your posture throughout the day. A height-adjustable table is suitable for a standing online meeting, or sitting with customers. Try a footrest or a standing mat to stimulate blood circulation.

Add a little storage and adequate lighting on the ceiling and an adjustable desk light. Open storage makes it easier to find and use everything your work needs. A movable screen on wheels is great for inspiration and important to-do lists.

Room can always be found for an office space

What do you do if you need a home office but are a bit short on space? Take a deep breath: the right furniture can make almost anywhere a functional, healthy workplace. At a pinch, even a closet or a corner of a room at home can work well. Choose a small but comfy chair, a versatile desk, adjustable lighting, shelves for all the stuff you need at hand when working and a wall-mounted noticeboard to pin up ideas and to-do lists. You have your new office! Can't find everything you need right away?

No problem. You can always add the things you need as and when you need them.

Our extensive range consists of many products designed to be combined in all sorts of ways. Choose the ideas that suit your work and the area you have available. There are as many options as there are businesses! Finding a combination that suits your home office is a creative and fun journey. We promise.

Five basic tips to create a home office

↓ Storage box TIDY [136280]

↑ Standing desk converter READY [149060]

1. A good chair is vital for any office. And we have lots to choose from. All to help you find one that suits your home, and the way you sit when working.

2. The word 'ergonomic' comes from the Greek words for work and distribution, and is the science of how the things you use to work and your working environment affect you. It also affects the results of your work. To get the best out of your home office, it's important to regard it as a whole. For example: don't use the kitchen worktop, but browse through our well-designed desks instead. Your body will thank you!

3. Smart storage is the enemy of disorganisation. You need access to your binders and papers when working. But when the day is over, you'll probably want your work-space to revert to being part of your home. The secret to making that transformation, is smart storage. And you can find everything you need from us. Smart no?

4. If you work a lot on a laptop, you'll need it at eye height. If you work at a fixed-height desk then a simple desk riser or laptop stand gives you the right angle for your neck and helps avoid pain. Add a wireless mouse and keyboard, so your arms can rest on the desktop while you're working. You'll feel the difference immediately.

5. An often overlooked factor is lighting. The light around your computer screen may well be too low. If so, your pupils will dilate and the brightness of the screen will make your eyes tired faster. Use a lamp to light the area behind your screen to relieve eye strain while working.

Small office with room for big ideas

Is your modest office just the first step on an exciting journey with a new business idea? Or have you and a few others decided that your various businesses can stimulate each other by being together? Regardless of your plans for the future, we have the solution. You see here an office we created in 60 m² for four people.

Whether you're running a start-up that will soon be worldwide, or a small business with a size that suits you, the way forward is to find premises that offer a functional working area. The need for multifunctional areas is big in a small office. What serves as the coffee break table in the morning, is transformed into a meeting table and can then be used for lunch, before hosting a strategy meeting in the afternoon with papers, laptops and Post-its all over the place. Along with the lounge area by the door, which may formerly have been used for Friday afternoon relaxation, is now the scene for spontaneous meetings and to informally meet customers or jobseekers.

With the right location, furniture and a relaxed look, you send a direct message about your brand and how you want it perceived. The infamous first impression - you can ensure it will be a good one with the right décor.

→ A neat, compact laptop desk with sturdy construction. Available in a number of colours. Laptop table STANDBY [148111].

↑ Really comfy armchair with hard-wearing back that suits most office environments when you need space for a quick meeting, to relax or a bit of peace and quiet. Our own-design COPENHAGEN series includes a 2-seater sofa and stool. Armchair COPENHAGEN [131501].

← The top is high-pressure laminated plywood, providing a hard-wearing and easy-clean surface. Desk NOVUS [120023].

You can get a compact workspace that works for you

When planning a small office, you need to ask yourself the same questions as when setting out the guidelines for an office environment in a much bigger room for many more people.

Start by planning where the traffic will flow in the room to make it easy to navigate around. Leave a quiet corner set aside for taking telephone calls or concentrated working on something important.

Once the flow through the office is agreed, take a browse through our extensive range of small, easily-placed desks, ergonomic chairs, comfy sofas and armchairs. Open storage for optimum accessibility and closed storage for things you want concealed can also be achieved in several ways using our different systems. You can satisfy the need to switch between sitting and standing using a mix of chairs, balance balls and mats to keep your back straight and supple.

↑ Chair with short armrests to make it easy to slide under the desktop. Tilttable seat, with adjustable height for a sitting position to suit you. A desk that lets you sit or stand when working. Program your own sitting or standing height, and switch between them easily and quickly. Office chair NEWBURY [122472] Desk NOVUS [120023].

↑ Workplace anti-fatigue mat that relieves the strain on your knees and back and improves your circulation when you work standing up. The fabric covers gives a discreet yet stylish appearance, and the handle makes it easy to move around. Workplace mat SPOT [25270].

↓ Sound-absorbent screen that also provides privacy. Great in open plan offices. Comes complete including fittings for easy mounting on the desk top. Desk screen ZONE [129041].

→ For the private workplace, a sit-stand desk in hard-wearing and easy-clean material is available. Height-adjustment is programmable. Perfect for a corner, or combined in a cloverleaf. Corner desk NOVUS [120043].

Flexibility means everyone has space

When space is at a premium, the flexibility you have is enhanced by the furniture and fixtures you choose. Smart recycling can be concealed in space-saving units. A tool panel gives quick, easy access to the various implements different meetings and tasks require. Many of our products are co-designed by you. You decide how different things should be used to meet the particular functional needs you see in your own office. Think how a single workspace can be used for different purposes. Then look at what each needs in the way of equipment. Don't forget about storage, making it quick and easy to clear away lunch things and prepare the same space for an afternoon meeting without it looking like a kitchen.

← Bar stool in our own timeless design, with seat and legs in the same colour. Stackable, making cleaning easier. Suitable for lunch, conferences and meetings. Bar stool GANDER [103245].

"Anything can happen in a small office. A small business finds its form while it grows, and the same space has to be used in many different ways. A board meeting that turns into a hectic brainstorming session, and then results in a spontaneous after-work get-together has to remain in the same flexible space."

Ulrika Sjöo Wiberg - Interior decorator

Working together is as easy as living together

We spend a lot of time with the people we work with. It can even feel as if our co-workers are part of the family on some days! So it's important that the working environment in the office is convivial.

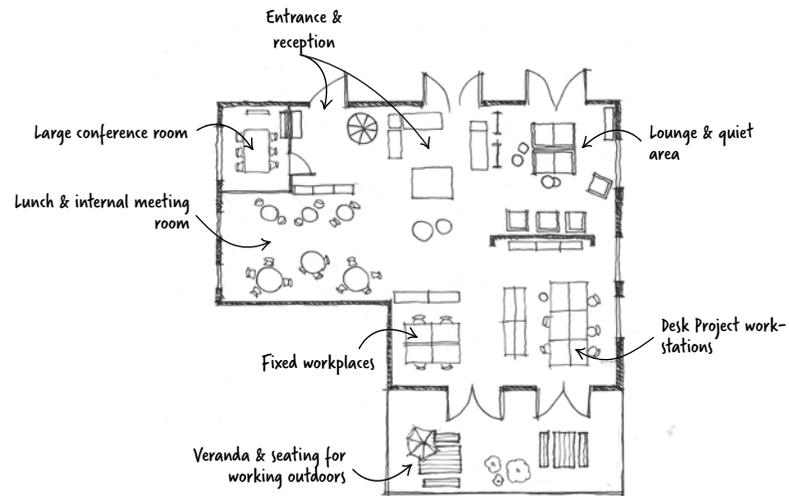

We all have our favourite places to meet, work undisturbed, lay out our stuff and set up a base, talk together, communicate online and on the phone. And that's true at work and home. Let planning the office be inspired by the various areas of the home, and see where it leads. We're convinced that job satisfaction increases if you forget the old way of thinking what an office should look like, and focus on what it could look like instead. Several of the products in our range have a design that would also be welcome in the home. And that's why we started to think that the high standards we set for our home décor could influence that of the office. The intimate and cosy then meet practical and functional. Try it and see! We believe this can be applied to the office in a way that will make it feel like home.

"Just as the home has become a workplace for a few days a week, the office needs to draw inspiration from the home to ensure health and job satisfaction"

Ulrika Sjö Wiberg - Interior decorator

Let nature in, and take your work out

After a break from work in the place you love the most, your home, a summer rental, or a mountain cabin, you'll look at the office with new eyes. Can being close to greenery and nature help you enjoy work more? Let's get rid of clinical office environments, and bring in plants, harmony and friendlier furniture. The job of the office to be welcoming is now more important than ever to boost health, satisfaction, productivity, creativity and team spirit. And any office with the chance to open a door and work outside should make the most of it. Holding a spontaneous meeting or phone call outside in the fresh air can revitalise you and your work. In the same way that you're free to move around at home, you can now do it at work. Raise your desk for a while, change chairs, sit in an easy chair with sound-absorbent sides and feel how your concentration gets a boost. Lots of companies are replacing their old showpiece offices with more intimate and inviting work areas. How will you fare in your newly-designed office?

The sound of silence

Acoustics are just as important as ergonomics when it comes to creating a functional office space where a lot of people need to work, talk, listen and be heard. Good acoustics are easy to achieve with sound-absorbent wall panels, thickly-padded chairs and fabric-covered screens. A good acoustic environment helps avoid tiredness and concentration problems. We can help you find the right products.

← 1- and 2 seater sofa with sound-absorbing fabric material on the high sides for peace while working, ensuring you're not disturbed (and don't disturb others). Sound-absorbing sofa 1-seat HUSH [143902] and 2-seat [143912].

In the morning, you might want to sit by yourself and concentrate on a particular task, then after lunch take part in a digital meeting sitting in screened surroundings to provide privacy and prevent disruptive noise. With furniture that creates space for different work setups, both situations can be realised in the best possible way. In a comfortable, welcoming office that offers the opportunity to move around and gather in small groups when needed, a day at work becomes more stimulating and varied. Use the qualities and features of the room to create different areas to work in with the help of the right furniture.

Lunch meeting, or post-lunch me- eting? You decide

Even in larger offices, every space has to play different roles. With the right furniture, flexibility is increased and you're the one who decides what you want to do, and when. Your furniture should not get in the way. Chairs that are just as good for relaxation as for working long periods. Desks and tables that can naturally be used for working, meetings or eating, without compromising any of their functions.

How an hour spent emailing can give you a stronger back

Hand on heart, we do spend a lot of time sitting in the office. But apart from being able to work standing up instead, and even walking while you work, you can sit more actively.

New furniture and other equipment designed to keep your body moving makes work easier and improves your health. With an ergonomic Pilates ball, a balance stool or saddle chair, you can activate your back and pelvic muscles for example. Your posture will improve in line with your pelvis strengthening, giving you a more upright sitting posture. When the deeper muscles begin to work, they also burn more energy and calories as well as increasing your blood circulation. That in turn helps you think more clearly and become more productive.

Even more movement

You can also switch to something that takes movement to a whole new level for a little while each day. Using a treadmill or desk bike at your sit-stand desk makes 30 minutes of computer work into a half-hour slow walk or bike ride. Active chairs also relieve back problems by releasing tension in the back from an incorrect sitting position. Your body also becomes fitter and stronger.

Start gently

Remember that an active chair should only be used for a few hours a day initially, and can cause a little muscular stiffness. But once your body is used to it, you can use your active chair more and more, eventually reaching the stage where your conventional office chair is just an ornament. By getting a range of different active furniture items for the office, you and your colleagues can take turns, varying your working positions during the day. So say goodbye to sedentary work, and hello to the new, active office!

The office with everything, and a bit

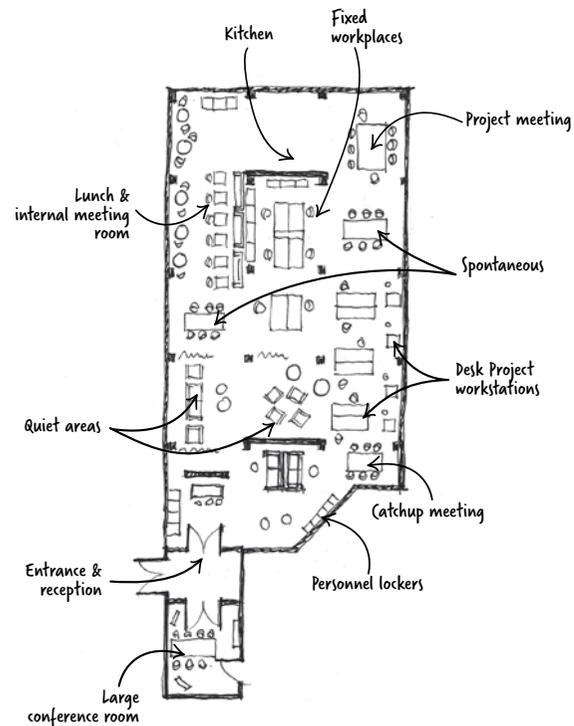

In large offices, many people often work in several different teams. That means a mix of fixed workstations with room for 3-8 people, who need to be able to work together. There also have to be places for working alone productively.

Office personnel used to sit at their own desk day in and day out, often in their own room with a closed door, maybe there was even a green light outside for "Enter" and a red one for "Busy". The wall has fallen and modern offices are designed for people to collaborate in different ways. Our work and the way we work together have changed. We still need some fixed workstations, but for most of us flexibility is key. Our workstations have to work as a place to meet, somewhere we can work undisturbed and everything in between. With the right furniture and fittings, you will find the right balance.

"What I look at first is the flow. How everyone is going to move. How all kinds of meetings can be held in one place. And how will the office support planned and spontaneous collaboration?"

Camilla Gantelius

Like a community in miniature

Lots of people are moving around a big office every day. So planning has to take into account workstations, traffic and job satisfaction.

To be able to design a big, highly-functional office, you need to ask a few questions. Where will the main traffic flow and where will be calmer? How can you create healthy workstations where it's easy to meet and swap ideas in an open plan office? Where should you put places to work in peace or conduct a discreet conversation? Where do we meet for lunch? Are there any areas where it's natural to spontaneously sit down and cast ideas around?

By expecting each area to have multiple functions, office design must get everything to work together in the best way possible. All while creating the right working conditions for everyone who spends their workday there.

← An ergonomic balance ball contributes to active sitting, which strengthens the muscles. Perfect for changing around during the day. Balance ball CORBRIDGE [253241].

↑ A fixed workstation needs an office chair with multiple settings. You adjust it for your own comfort. Covered in 100% recycled material. Office chair LANCASTER [14522].

↑ Electric sit-stand desk with an easy-clean laminate top. Connected to your PC, to remind you to switch between sitting and standing. Desk MODULUS SMART [1614314].

Switch from working undisturbed, to being right in the middle of the action

Think about it: there's not really any one place in an office suitable for any situation. A desk in an open plan office is great for a certain type of working, but you may need to work alone, or with others, and concentrate on something in particular. And there are lots of different work-situations in between. From segregated and solo work, to open working in teams. As you can see there are lots of different items of furniture and fixtures to make it happen. Desks of all sizes, screens to suppress noise and create intimate workspaces, different types of seating for a bit of peace and quiet for you and those you're working with. What does your office need?

↑ A fabric-covered screen effectively absorbs noise, and provides privacy. Desk screen ZONE [129061].

↑ A single-seat sofa with high sides to effectively cut out noise, and create a quiet space. Put two of them facing each other for an intimate, private meeting. Match the office, or stand out with a bold colour. Sofa, 1-seat HUSH [143902]. An ottoman with a hard-wearing fabric cover available in different colours. Ottoman ELLA [363837].

Why not sit down for a stand-up meeting?

Less than 6 million years ago, man began to stand upright. Then we started sitting in offices, and forgot all about how important it is to stretch now and again. Now's the chance to put history right again.

We believe that the same workspace should be able to accommodate different work situations. Because furniture should not only look nice, it's a practical asset to help you do your job as effectively as possible. A height-adjustable meeting table/desk makes it easy and quick to switch between standing and sitting several times during the working day. With a few high stools, anyone who needs to give their legs a rest can sit while still taking part in the meeting around the same table.

↑ Stylish meeting chair that is adjustable and never compromises on comfort. Also ideal for use in a lounge. Conference chair FAIRFIELD [103934].

↑ A height-adjustable table converts a conference room quickly and simply to a working office. Furnishings suitable for several different types of meeting and work situations create flexibility, and ensure that no areas are left unused. Modular table with 2 to 4 legs and up to 4 metres in length, with electric rise/fall. Noise-reducing linoleum table top and bevelled edges. Conference table AUDREY [1190111].

→ Fixed height conference table in lengths of up to 5.6 metres AUDREY [1180421].

The canteen in a big office is the natural meeting point, often spacious and airy. Everything from breakfast to major internal meetings can happen here. With stackable chairs and easy-wipe tables, it can act as a meeting room or occasional work/project room for one or more teams. Proximity to the coffee machine and kitchenette is also ideal for a room that might be used for concentrated work for a couple of hours. Install a drawer unit in there with concealed storage for everything needed for a meeting, such as note blocks, pens, Post-It notes and so on. That way you are prepared and have everything to hand but it can be put away during lunchtime. Remember that the lighting has to be discreet during breaks but effective when work starts again.

↓ Sound-absorbing panels in recycled material. Velcro® tape to attach them to the wall is included. Sound-absorbent PATTERN [137980].

→ Low, stackable chair for coffee room or canteen. Comfortable shell with armrests Chair RIVER [128174]. A small table with hard-wearing top that can be combined to make a long table surface. Table BECKY [128180]
